Administrative / Biographical history
A working group entitled “New Sources of Finance” was created by IOC President Juan Antonio Samaranch in 1981\(^1\). Its mission was to find other sources of revenue for the IOC and the Olympic Movement than TV rights revenues. The IOC did not want to depend on only one source of revenues, but wanted to diversify its sources in order to avoid political or commercial limitations\(^2\).

The Working Group also had a duty to assist the National Olympic Committees (NOCs), to ensure that any marketing activity undertaken by the IOC benefited the NOCs. It thus aimed to ensure collaboration for all marketing activities between the IOC, the NOCs and the Organising Committees for the Olympic Games (OCOGs)\(^3\).

In March 1983, the Working Group recommended the IOC to turn to International Sports Culture and Leisure Marketing SA (ISL), specialised in merchandising, marketing and promoting sports marketing and based in Lucerne (Switzerland), to set up a worldwide marketing programme\(^4\). With this company, the IOC set up a programme entitled the International Olympic Marketing Programme (IOMP), later renamed The Olympic Partner (TOP) Programme. This programme provides each worldwide Olympic partner with exclusive worldwide marketing rights\(^5\). Contracts are concluded with the NOCs for the marketing rights in their respective countries.

The Working Group also focused on other projects, such as Olympic coin programmes, as other revenues sources for the IOC.

In 1983, the New Sources of Finance Working Group became the New Sources of Finance Commission\(^6\). In September 1997, the Commission officially changed its name to become the Marketing Commission, to better reflect its activities.

The first meeting of the Working Group was held in Rome (Italy) on 24 May 1982. It was chaired by Ivorian member Louis Guirandou-N'Diaye. In 1988, Canadian member Richard Pound took over the chairmanship of the Commission.

As at 1 March 2014, the Marketing Commission was still active.
